MISS ANGELA SAVARESE

Young America On The Move Back To School After Holiday

By KAY ROSS

By air from here to Tulsa; by train from the snow-covered wheat fields of Western Kansas back here again, it's all the same story. This Christmas season it was young America on the move, going home West from Eastern schools; passing on the way, going and coming, Eastern youth going back to Western schools.

And elbowing a little for room in the aisles and the diners and club cars, or even in the aisles of the great airplanes, mothers and fathers with their families, which in most cases it seemed, never numbered less than four small people of which none were more than 5 or 6 years old. And Papa seemed always to carry the baby. One drawing room on the Pennsylvania out of Chicago, in which three adults can sleep, had five tiny tot passengers along with the two parents. The porter said he thought some of the children were held up by their belts at right on the coat hooks.

Publum Pleasant

On the Santa Fe's Chicagoan, that wonderful all-chair train from Dallas to Chicago, with its huddle domed sightseeing car, publum and cereals are stocked as plentifully in the dining car kitchen as were steaks and the usual adult foods.

And on the Pennsylvania's club car, young male third graders vied with the elders for the small tables where they played endless car games of some sort.

Missing only were baby sitters but on the Santa Fe one conductor said it just might be that such a service, or perhaps a nursery car, might have to be added if family travel continues its present upward trend.

A Blonde Wonder

And here's some of the odd bits of conversation one hears: The blonde girl from St. Louis University to the black-haired girl going to Frisco. "Do you really think the Russian courses at Michigan are as good as those at Lehigh?" The serene-faced woman bound to me to Topeka: "We're getting our doctor's degree at Columbia this winter, then back again to the Philippines and the missions. Fifteen years now out there so it's more than home to us. But Cathy, here, will stay behind to go to Middlebury next year. For the languages, you know."

Add most beautiful sight of a Western Christmas: Sunrise over Lake Gibson east of Tulsa, with the bare branches of the oaks covering the Cookson Hills glowing rosy pink in the dawn and "smoke" rising from the half frozen waters where even in winter and at Christmas time, a few dedicated fishermen later in the day cast their lines from the fishing docks.

Weather Postpones Rare Celebration

The things the weather does! It doesn't even bow to a half-century of marriage. Such an occasion should rightfully have been celebrated Christmas Eve by the Charles Fredericksens of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., former residents of White Plains.

Charlie writes that he and his wife are postponing their celebration until Easter when they will journey to Malvern, Pa., for a joint gala with their daughter, Muriel, and son-in-law, Carlson J. Morris, who will be married 25 years on the 17th of this month.

All this is due, he writes, "to the type of weather you are having up there," a typical Floridian commentary. Charlie says he and his wife feel just fine and are greatly enjoying retirement in a sunny land. Such pleasure couldn't be bestowed upon two nicer people.

For their many friends who may have temporarily misplaced the Fort Lauderdale address it is 200 N.W. 53rd St. The mail bag will be stuffed with cards from those who won't wait until Easter.

S.L.C. Chamber Music Programs To Begin

Workshop Bridge Planned At YMCA In New Rochelle

An intermediate workshop for bridge students is scheduled for seven weeks on Wednesday evenings beginning Jan. 11 at the Huguenot YMCA in New Rochelle under the supervision of Miss Mildred Betzler of White Plains.

Miss Betzler is a Life Master in the American Contract Bridge League and a member of the C. Jack Bonney Bridge Associates staff of teachers.

The workshop is planned to meet the needs of students who have completed an intermediate course but is open to those who have adequate bridge background.

The series will feature intensive practice and drill aimed at developing skill in planned play and defense by means of lectures, supervised play, and competitive duplicate bridge with discussion of hands. Subjects emphasized will depend on the needs of the group.

Classes will meet from 8:15 to 10:15 p.m. Since this course is offered infrequently, players from other Westchester communities are invited to join the New Rochelle group. Registration is for the entire series and forms can be obtained at the New Rochelle Y.

Stork In Fashion On Holiday Stops

The stork may bring babies in conventional fashion most of the year, but between Christmas and New Year's Days, babies go home from Dobbs Ferry Hospital in Santa Claus boots!

The Women's Auxiliary of the hospital for the past three years has made red felt boots trimmed with white felt tops and jingle bells for these special deliveries. This year on Christmas Day, brand new John Hong, son of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Hong of 578 Warburton Ave. in Hastings-on-Hudson was thus dispatched from the hospital.

Two other babies — Paul Buccell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Buccell of 135 Main St. in Dobbs Ferry and Mark Bruce Maxwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Maxwell of 485 Ashford Ave., Ardsley — also went home in holiday attire: Mrs. Randolph Neives, chairman of the sewing committee of the auxiliary, made this year's boots.

Paper Lifts Errors Off A Typed Sheet

NEW YORK — Treated paper that makes it possible to correct typing errors without erasing is being marketed in New York. The paper is placed over the error. The error is then retyped, and the paper is said to actually lift the incorrectly typed letter or letters from the page.
