

2 Young Westchester Girls To Perform In Carnegie Hall

NEW YORK — Two talented Westchester girls, personally selected by Leopold Stokowski, will perform original compositions for piano at the Third Annual Concert for Children at Carnegie Hall on April 15.

Dorothy Gross, 14, of 30 Echo Bay Drive, New Rochelle, will play "Clockwork".

"Sunset and Twilight" will be played by 13-year-old Faye Silverman of 27 Claremont Ave., Mount Vernon.

The girls are among five winners in the Contest for Young Composers. The concert, presented by the Parents League of New York, will feature Mr. Stokowski directing the Symphony of the Air.

Dorothy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irving M. Gross, composed "Clockwork" a few months ago. She has been studying music since she was six years old.

Faye also plays a second instrument. She's been studying the clarinet for two years and is a member of
