The Sunday Times
March 27, 2022
17

Stephen King: How prayer saved me

Liam Duffy
Art Correspondent

Stephen King, the novelist whose latest novel, \"The Institute,\" is coming out in September, told The Sunday Times that he has turned to prayer to help him through the coronavirus pandemic.

The author, who is a devout Catholic, said he has been attending Mass daily since the pandemic began and has been praying for those who have been affected by the virus.

"I have always been a person of faith," King said. "But I think it has become more important than ever during this time."

King said he has been reading the Bible every day and has been especially drawn to the story of Jesus' crucifixion and resurrection.

He has also been using his writing to cope with the pandemic, he said, describing how he has been able to find comfort in the process of creating his own stories.

"I try to think about the power of stories to calm the mind," King said. "And I try to think about the power of stories to give us hope in difficult times."

King's latest novel, \"The Institute,\" is expected to be a bestseller when it is released in September.

\"It\'s a story about the power of love and the power of family,\" he said. \"I hope it will resonate with readers.\"

Interviews

Some features are made for the hero and now... some is built to stand the test of time. At Navigation, we believe that the best can be built. Good design never grows old.

The Sunday Times
March 27, 2022

Murdered Briton’s daughter confronts Isis ‘Bealie’

Tuesday, March 22, 2022

 Murdered Briton’s daughter confronts Isis ‘Bealie’

Stephen King: How prayer saved me

Liam Duffy
Art Correspondent

Stephen King, the novelist whose latest novel, “The Institute,” is coming out in September, told The Sunday Times that he has turned to prayer to help him through the coronavirus pandemic.

The author, who is a devout Catholic, said he has been attending Mass daily since the pandemic began and has been praying for those who have been affected by the virus.

“I have always been a person of faith,” King said. “But I think it has become more important than ever during this time.”

King said he has been reading the Bible every day and has been especially drawn to the story of Jesus’ crucifixion and resurrection.

He has also been using his writing to cope with the pandemic, he said, describing how he has been able to find comfort in the process of creating his own stories.

“I try to think about the power of stories to calm the mind,” King said. “And I try to think about the power of stories to give us hope in difficult times.”

King’s latest novel, “The Institute,” is expected to be a bestseller when it is released in September.

“It’s a story about the power of love and the power of family,” he said. “I hope it will resonate with readers.”

Interviews

Some features are made for the hero and now... some is built to stand the test of time. At Navigation, we believe that the best can be built. Good design never grows old.

The Sunday Times
March 27, 2022

Stephen King: How prayer saved me

Liam Duffy
Art Correspondent

Stephen King, the novelist whose latest novel, “The Institute,” is coming out in September, told The Sunday Times that he has turned to prayer to help him through the coronavirus pandemic.

The author, who is a devout Catholic, said he has been attending Mass daily since the pandemic began and has been praying for those who have been affected by the virus.

“I have always been a person of faith,” King said. “But I think it has become more important than ever during this time.”

King said he has been reading the Bible every day and has been especially drawn to the story of Jesus’ crucifixion and resurrection.

He has also been using his writing to cope with the pandemic, he said, describing how he has been able to find comfort in the process of creating his own stories.

“I try to think about the power of stories to calm the mind,” King said. “And I try to think about the power of stories to give us hope in difficult times.”

King’s latest novel, “The Institute,” is expected to be a bestseller when it is released in September.

“It’s a story about the power of love and the power of family,” he said. “I hope it will resonate with readers.”

Interviews

Some features are made for the hero and now... some is built to stand the test of time. At Navigation, we believe that the best can be built. Good design never grows old.

The Sunday Times
March 27, 2022

Stephen King: How prayer saved me

Liam Duffy
Art Correspondent

Stephen King, the novelist whose latest novel, “The Institute,” is coming out in September, told The Sunday Times that he has turned to prayer to help him through the coronavirus pandemic.

The author, who is a devout Catholic, said he has been attending Mass daily since the pandemic began and has been praying for those who have been affected by the virus.

“I have always been a person of faith,” King said. “But I think it has become more important than ever during this time.”

King said he has been reading the Bible every day and has been especially drawn to the story of Jesus’ crucifixion and resurrection.

He has also been using his writing to cope with the pandemic, he said, describing how he has been able to find comfort in the process of creating his own stories.

“I try to think about the power of stories to calm the mind,” King said. “And I try to think about the power of stories to give us hope in difficult times.”

King’s latest novel, “The Institute,” is expected to be a bestseller when it is released in September.

“It’s a story about the power of love and the power of family,” he said. “I hope it will resonate with readers.”

Interviews

Some features are made for the hero and now... some is built to stand the test of time. At Navigation, we believe that the best can be built. Good design never grows old.

The Sunday Times
March 27, 2022

Stephen King: How prayer saved me

Liam Duffy
Art Correspondent

Stephen King, the novelist whose latest novel, “The Institute,” is coming out in September, told The Sunday Times that he has turned to prayer to help him through the coronavirus pandemic.

The author, who is a devout Catholic, said he has been attending Mass daily since the pandemic began and has been praying for those who have been affected by the virus.

“I have always been a person of faith,” King said. “But I think it has become more important than ever during this time.”

King said he has been reading the Bible every day and has been especially drawn to the story of Jesus’ crucifixion and resurrection.

He has also been using his writing to cope with the pandemic, he said, describing how he has been able to find comfort in the process of creating his own stories.

“I try to think about the power of stories to calm the mind,” King said. “And I try to think about the power of stories to give us hope in difficult times.”

King’s latest novel, “The Institute,” is expected to be a bestseller when it is released in September.

“It’s a story about the power of love and the power of family,” he said. “I hope it will resonate with readers.”

Interviews

Some features are made for the hero and now... some is built to stand the test of time. At Navigation, we believe that the best can be built. Good design never grows old.